A Chicago hotel had a night watchman who did not take very kindly to a system whereby he was required to go through the hotel at certain hours and touch a set of electric buttons, thus indicating his whereabouts at a given time. So a pedometer was given him, which would register every step he took.

All went well for a time. One morning, however, the watchman was missing. On search being made, he was found asleep in the engine room, and the pedometer so attached to the piston rod of the engine that with every stroke it registered a step. It had been traveling all night, and when taken off it registered two hundred and twelve miles.—Ex.
